

Welcome to Weston Park Museum

Weston Park Museum is in Weston Park. The park entrance is on a busy road.

It is free to enter. You will not need a ticket.

This is the main entrance to the museum.
It may look like this when you visit.
There are steps and a ramp up to the entrance.

There is also an entrance through the museum café, Ambulo.

This is the museum foyer.

In the museum foyer there is a welcome desk. There will be a friendly staff member here to welcome you and answer any questions.

There are large benches for visitors to use in the foyer. There are also lockers which require a refundable £1 coin or trolley token.

Pushchairs are often left in this area. It may look a little different to this when you visit and sometimes it can be very busy and noisy.

Next to the reception desk is a visitor lift and stairs. You can use them to get to the picnic area upstairs.

There are male, female and accessible toilets in this area. There are also baby changing facilities.

This is the picnic area. It is on the first floor but is accessible by lift. You can use this space to eat and drink.

Sometimes it is booked by school groups. You can enjoy your food and drink in the foyer downstairs if it is unavailable.

This is the main corridor of the museum.

There are eight galleries about different subjects. Some will change regularly. It might be different when you visit.

At the end of the corridor there are accessible toilets and baby changing facilities.

There is also a Changing Places toilet.

There are many things in the galleries that you can touch and interact with.

The galleries are often very noisy and busy with families. Sometimes there are school groups doing activities in the galleries.

What On Earth is a natural history gallery. There are lots of stuffed animals around and insects in drawers.

There are some darker areas here and it is often very busy and noisy with families.

There are some objects in the museum which you are not allowed to touch.

You can ask questions if you would like to find out more. There will be friendly staff who can help.

We hope you enjoy your visit to Weston Park Museum
